Reviews

The study by Dr. Aleksander Olech is very competent, based on a wide source material, bringing the reader closer to the conditions and assumptions of the contemporary security policy of France and Poland. The book has not only cognitive value, but also contains many valuable comments that allow for the practical use of this knowledge in the process of formulating the goals and tasks of institutions responsible for the implementation of the security policy of European countries. In addition, it is worth recommending to both researchers and practitioners, especially in the field of law and terrorism.

The monograph is a significant contribution to the development of knowledge about the activities of the state and its services in the face of existing threats. The author tries to answer the question of whether a common concept of building an anti-terrorist policy is possible in order to protect universal values that constitute the basis of a democratic state. The research analysis conducted in the book on the anti-terrorist system of the French Republic and the Republic of Poland provides the possibility of a multithreaded and interdisciplinary look at internal and international security. The study will be of interest for people dealing with geopolitics and security.
